Not illustrated. 1905 Excerpt: .easily find a plan of distribution in which the effects of practice are properly compensated. At the conclusion of the experiment, E sorts out the 200 results into two groups of 100 each, which he arranges in columns under the rubrics / (rt to the left) and II (rl to the right of r). The values r_m , e_m and c are to be determined separately for each group of 100 determinations. We have said that the value e_m is the most characteristic test-value furnished by the method. We shall want, then, to determine e_m as accurately as possible. Now in any given setting of r , the error e is algebraically added to a constant error c . But a constant error is simply an error whose conditions are constant; its amount may vary, quite considerably, from stage to stage of a long series of experiments. If our own constant error c has varied in this way, its variation must evidently have affected the value of e_m as determined above. To free e_m of any influence of this sort, we must fractionate the results. We determine Z_e , not for the whole group of 100 observations, but for quarter-groups of 25 observations apiece; and we determine e_m , not as., but as 100 This value is more accurate than the value On the other hand, it is 100 indifferent for the determination of the c of each group whether we work from the group as a whole, or separately from...
