A MONG the provincial Curling Societies of Scotland a prominent place is due to the Sanquhar Club, which has been in existence for upwards of a century. The history of the proceedings of this Society, compiled from the records by the Secretary, Mr James Brown, and published on the occasion of its centenary, 21st January 1874, is a most interesting little volume, and indeed a model work for succinctness, good taste, and good feeling. Mr Brown gives the first minute as follows: -- On Friday, the 21st day of January 1774, near sixty curlers met upon Sanquhar Loch and had an agreeable game at curling. In the evening they dined together in the Duke of Queensbery s Arms at Sanquhar. After dinner, it was proposed that they should form themselves into a Society, under the name of the Sanquhar Society...
