General Accounting Office, 2001 OCLC Number: (OCoLC)48586732 Subject: Educational vouchers -- Ohio -- Cleveland. Excerpt: . . . Cleveland program, a key provision is the use of a random selection process when the number of eligible applicants exceeds the number of spaces a school has designated for students. Each school has discretion in setting the number of voucher students it will accommodate in each grade and must specify this number at the time it notifies the state of its intent to participate in the program. Each school must also submit an annual written plan describing its intended method for randomly selecting voucher students when the number of applicant voucher students exceeds the number of available spaces allocated for them. As in Cleveland, the extent to which schools have used random selection is unknown because schools are not required to report on its use. The school must accept all eligible applicants if space is available. In addition, schools cannot select students on the basis of race, religion, gender, prior achievement, or prior behavioral records. Continuing students and their siblings are exempt from the random selection requirement. Compared to public school students, voucher students in both Cleveland Voucher Family and Milwaukee came from families with less income and that were more likely to be headed by parents who were single or not married to the Characteristics, as person they were living with. Voucher students parents were also more Well as Voucher likely to have completed at least high school than were public school students parents. Some research for Milwaukee also provided reliable School Attributes, information on students academic achievement prior to their participation Differ From Those of in a voucher...
