OCLC Number: (OCoLC)263148676 Subject: Water quality -- Colorado -- Summit County. Excerpt: . . . than 0. 05. A p-value expresses the probability of detecting a trend when no trend is present. A detailed discussion of Kendalls tau and its application is included in Helsel and Hirsch (1993). Because Kendalls tau depends upon the rank of data rather than a numerical value, an analysis using the core depth or the estimated year of deposition would yield the same results. In most cases, core depth (x variable) was paired with constituent concentration (y variable); the results were used to make inferences about trends in water quality within the reservoir over time. Mass loads of trace elements were determined for water entering and leaving the reservoir during water years 1997 and 1998. The loads were calculated as a sum of daily loads, using daily mean flow from gaging stations located near the sampling sites in a regression based on the log of the instantaneous concentration relative to the log of instantaneous flow. The smearing estimator (Duan, 1983) was used to correct for retransformation bias for log-transformed Collecting water-quality samples from a data. In cases where there was no relationship between cableway downstream from Dillon Reservoir the log of streamflow and the log of concentration, on the Blue River. the mean concentration was used to estimate daily loads. This case was most often observed in the data were used for the reservoir samples. Concentrations of obtained from the Blue River downstream from Dillon dissolved aluminum, barium, copper, iron, manganese, Reservoir. Censored data were replaced with...
